for some reason or other, does not take to English operas as kindly as she does to the more difficult operas of Lew Benedict and J. L. Carnerosa, as the audience of last night will demonstrate. Taking into consideration the opera that was presented and the character of the performers, the audience was shamefully small, but what it lacked in numbers it made up in enthusiasm.

THE STRAUDER CASE.

nother Hearing Yesterday After Taylor Strauder was again brought into the U. S. District Court yesterday after-noon by Sheriff Tingle, in obedience to a writ of habeas corpus issued a day or two ago, requiring the body of the prisoner at the hands of the Sheriff. Attorney General Robert White accompanied Mr. rail Bodert white accompanied ar.
Tingle, loaded down with a large number of books, and at once the large crowd of spectators whose curiosity had impelled their attendance, were on the qui vice for something unusual. After some routine business had been transacted Judge Jackson turned to those having Strauder in custody and asked them if they were prepared with their answer to the writ. General White said he had the answer ready, but he first desired to move to quash the writ. At this the Judge smited, other lawyers cocked their ears and drew nearer the table, and Capt. Dovener, rising, said he did not understand the object of the Attorney General in making the motion, as he (White) was only there to represent Tingle and for nothing else.

General White—"If your Honor please, I have a decision here of Judge Haymond, of the Supreme Court of West Virginia"—

Judge Jackson, interjecting: "It is useless for you, sir, to present anything but United State Supreme Court decisions in this court, and I hardfy think any intelligent court would decide as you say. When a this court gets possession of the prisoner, Sheriff Tingle's connection with him Tingle, loaded down with a large number gent court would decide as you say. When this court gets possession of the prisoner, Sheriff Tingle's connection with him ceases. The only object of a habeas corpus is the production of the prisoner, and the question of lilegal detention will then be passed upon. You can, however, withdraw the motion to quash the writ and move to quash the return to it, which I apprehend you won't do." General White—"It think, sir, neither the writ nor the return bears evidence of illegal detention, nor is there evidence upon its face of illegality. I do not think a District Judge has any authority to try whether he is illegally detained or not, unless he is detained in contravention of the laws of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, or some act of Congress."

Capt. Dovener—"Strauder want's to know why he is detained."
Attorney General White then ventilated his ideas on the question of quashing the writ, and quoted the case of Dorr, the Rhode Island traitor and other decisions, which the judge ruled were not apposite. General White also read from the decision of Judge Haymond, which Judge Jackson had previously interdicted, but this was disposed of as having no bearing on the case, after which the motion to quash was overruled, and the prisoner, Strauder, taken to jail in the custody of Deputy Marshal John D. Maxwell, in order to allow Capt. Dovener time to amend his petition for a habeas corpus.

General Campaign News and Notes. The grand demonstration advertized by the Democracy to take place at the Capitol building last evening, was changed to a "mum social" in the Washington Hall, owing to the inclemency of the weather. The hall was filled at an early hour, and the audience was entertained in the waiting moments by Kramer's band. In giancing over the assemblage the reporter's eagle eye detected a number of Republican faces. The people were orderly, and patiently heard the speaker whether they can faces. The people were orderly, and patiently heard the speaker whether they grasped the ideas or net.

At 8 o'clock a stir in the andience and craning of necks indicated that the orator of the evening was entering the Hall. His entrance was a touching sight. The procession was as long as the aisle, and in front appeared the warlike form of Col. Miller, followed by Philo Kimberly with anstere look. Then came the Hon. Geo. Pendicton, whose rear guard was Lewis Baker, Col. Josef Gallaher and Col. Geo. Tingle, which looked as if the olive branch was waving in the Democratic family again. But then looks are very deceptive, and in this case should be given the benefit of the doubt. While the pilgrimage from the door to the stage was being made (fen. Bashrod Price, from a seat on the stage, relexed his grim expression, which added greatly to the theatrical effect. When the andience had been stilled into a calm Philo Kimberly, in his best French, announced that as Chairman of the County Executive Committee the appointment of a chairman of the county Executive Committee the appointment

When the audience had been stilled into a caim Philo Kimberly, in his best French, announced that as Chairman of the County Executive Committee the appointment of a chairman of the meeting devolved upon him, and he therefore called Capt. Andrew Wilson from seclusion and named him as the presiding officer. A motion was made that the city editors of the daily papers be made Secretaries, and the assenting vote was so weak that the honor could not be felt.

Capt. Wilson without any preliminary, remarks introduced Senator Pendleton. The Senator is a pleasant looking gentleman, intelligent countenance, expressive, bright eyes, a portly frame, and has a general well fed appearance, and stands about feet. S inches in his shoes. He has dark hair, mustache and chin whiskers, slightly tinged with grey, and bears a slight resemblance to Gen. Tom Ewing. We would say that the Senator had passed his fiftieth birth-day by three or four years. His manners are engaging, speech fluent, but he has none of the elements of moving oratory. His style is calm and precise and not without polish. He is a good talker, an indifferent orator, and a poor enthuser. His opening remarks wore confined to a relation of his former visits to this city and the circumstances and mot without polish. He is a good talker, an indifferent orator, and a precise and not without polish. He is a good talker, an indifferent orator, and the wore confined to a relation of his former visits to this city and the circumstances. The Senator Pater a prelude about the institutions of our Government spoke of the Work of the Country of the Chief Magistrate, and that two great polities and the voter has to choose of one of the representatives of the parties. One of the two parties must elect al-President. The voter must affiliate with that party that nearest resembles his own views. Only one have I known a third party to be successful, and that was when the man who was beaunt was counted in. This delicately worded the lungs of the delighted Democracy to their utmost.

He preluded his reasons with a graphic and picturesque description of the nomination of Hancock, in which one thousand beautiful ladies who were seated on the stage figured prominently. It was done

The Senator said Hancock should be elected because he was a statesman, Democrat and soldier. These three attributes of the Democratic candidate were enlarged on. His statesmanship was shown by his administration of affairs in Louisiana and Texas, and his famons enlarged on. Has discommand was shown by his administration of affairs in I Louisiana and Texas, and his famous orders, which the Senator thought were full of wisdom and patriotism. In reference to his Democracy he said there was a resemblance between Hancock and Jefferson. He made the comparison strained, however, by reciting the Jeffersonian creed, which made half the audience look as if they did not recognize their faith. What a change since then, He closed his sulogy on Hancock by saying "that statesmanelip might take a lesson from his record and patriotism catch an inspiration." This was cheered by the entire lung power of the Democracy.

The speaker now turned his attention to General Garfield and gave some res ons why he thought he should not be elected. He distressed his hearers with a tedious relation of General Garfield's con nection with the electoral commission, an words, but he did say that the party had been in power long enough; that it had ruled for twenty years—years marked by Iraud, corruption and mismanagement. The Senator then appeared in the role of vindicator of our own Henry G.'s great Treasury investigation act. The figures were read, and the audience grew listless and inattentive, and showed no disposition to listen to the "greatest effort" West Virginia's statesman ever made. The Senator closed his speech by eulogisting the Democratic party, and damning the Republican party which he said was "born of sectional hatred and nourished on the arrocities of civil war." Mr. Pendeton spoke for one hour and twenty minutes and held the attention of the audience very well, but failed to excite that degree of enthusiasm it was expected he would do.

Loud cries were made for John Hanson

Good, and that gentleman stepped to the front. He said "that when the eagle soars the little birds should seek the nests." But the little bird didn't seek his nest, but entertained the audience with the fraud cry and an indulgence in reck-

It would have been proper at the opening of this report to have given the names of the prominent gentlemen on the stage, but as they were all so prominent and so many of them, we do not think the unintentional slight in failing to mention their importance as an auxiliary contribution to the success of the meeting will be noticed. The Eim Grove Republicans hold their grand mass meeting this evening. Arrangements have been made for a good it time, and our country friends desire their city friends to be present and help along the cause. A special train will leave the Baitimore and Ohio deput this evening at 7:15 o'clock. The train will stop at the Capitol. It has been arranged that the train will pass the grove and stop at Thornburg's crossing, where the city clubs will be met by an escort and march down to the place of speaking, which will be under the big elm tree, where a stand has been rected. Gen. Goff is announced to y address the people. All the city clubs have signified their intention of attending, and the prospects are that the meeting will be a flattering success. Let everybody turn out.

By some oversight the Young Men's Gardiel club was let out in the formation of the regimental line.
